Dear Readers!

We have a great pleasure of submitting the inaugural issue of The Polish Review of International and European Law. The new Journal is aimed at demonstrating and promoting research findings of the Polish doctrine of international and European law. We have a deep conviction that there is a need for setting up a new English journal in order to involve the Polish doctrine of international and European law in the main trend of science of international law. Thus we will be grateful for studies, articles, case comments and book reviews prepared in English. Although the Journal is mainly addressed to Polish authors, we do not close our pages for foreign scholars. The high-quality and diligence of received contributions will form the basic criterion in our selecting process. The PolRevIEL will be a quarterly. Besides, special issues are possible devoted to particularly important and topical legal problems.

The name of the Journal renders its scope. Thus, it basically covers various fields of international law, both public and private, and the European Union law. On account of the practical importance of the latter we make it, beside international law, the leading topic of the Journal. But it does not exclude contributions dedicated to non-European regional international law, international organizations law, so called self-contained regimes law, and even legal problems lying on the borderline between international law and states' legal orders. We are aware of the interdependency of various levels of legal regulations in today's world, which points out the flexibility of borders of internationality of contemporary law. Therefore we are looking forward to studies, articles and other contributions analyzing this complex structure of today's international law.
